The Serenity in Blue

Dear lovers of painting,

I invite you to discover a collection of blue paintings, born from a deep need for calm, simple beauty, and breath. These works are refuge spaces, inner landscapes where one can settle, float, dream. Welcome to this suspended space, between silence and light.

Peaceful Day
Oil on canvas, 81x100 cm

Peaceful Day – The Blue Breath

This painting is a suspended space of silence, like morning mist over a calm sea.

One enters it like a peaceful dream, with no beginning or end.

Everything is light, yet structured.

Vertical lines slide like ink on glass, and the central arch—almost a sail, almost an eye—invites us to pass through.

If this painting were a fragrance, it would be a fresh water with notes of iris, rain, and cedar.

If it were a dish, it would be a blue milk mousse, sweet and served in a warm porcelain bowl.

A taste of purity, calm, soft memory.

It evokes a village of silence, or perhaps a harbor of souls.

It hardly tells—it breathes, it rests.

Inspiration of the Day

When I began this collection, I was alone before the canvas. The world still asleep.

Little by little, shapes emerged—fluid, self-evident, they brushed my awareness gently.

They weren't ideas, not even intentions. Rather, a meditation in motion. A deep place, where I could simply be. Calm. Alive. Connected.

These paintings were born of a free and precise gesture, between figuration and abstraction, in that floating zone where the line becomes breath.

In the Vertigo of Silence

A breath at the summit.
It's about being there, standing on a cliff, looking at the horizon with confidence.
A small village suspended between sky and sea rises in the blue, a discreet, peaceful, almost secret shelter.
You feel the breeze brush your skin.
It's the moment just before the world awakens.
An aerial, fragile, precious instant.
A time-space where one is free to dream the future.

In the Morning Freshness

A fishing village is still asleep.
The houses nestled close together, awaiting a new day. Everything is calm. Just before time resumes its course, silence holds its breath.
It's a simple scene, almost ordinary...
Yet of discreet, poignant beauty.
One stands there, still, witness to the sacred fragility of dawn. A painting that speaks of slowness, softness, grounding.

And the Wild Souls Swirl

Here, magic surfaces. An ice-field landscape, a ballet of northern lights, sails, spirals. Frigates emerge, ghostly, like pirate dreams ready to share their secrets. Blue becomes enchantment.
Everything is movement, transition, momentum.
Each line is a current that carries the eye, the soul, the imagination.
It is a world where souls dance, free.
A place without gravity, without laws—except that of desire.
Where everything can be explored.

In the Intimacy of a Light-Inhabited Interior

There are places where silence can be heard.
Interiors where light doesn't merely illuminate—but caresses.
In one of these rare places, my four blue canvases found their place, aligned, organized in echo, like windows onto a breath.
These paintings are not just hung—they inhabit the space, transforming it into a place of calm and reconnection.
Like a flow of azure, they inscribe themselves into the room with fluidity.
Their forms rise and dissolve, between abstraction and figuration, like dreamlike islands, inner landscapes, soul breaths.
A soft, bluish vibration that invites calm.
